Localizing the SDGs – Developing sustainability strategies at the local level

Since the adoption of the SDGs in September 2015, an increasing amount of attention is paid to their implementation at the local level. It is broadly accepted that in the “Century of Cities” (Michael Bloomberg), action at the local level will be paramount to building sustainable communities and to addressing the numerous challenges posed by the SDGs. Accordingly, a large number of activities have been launched to foster SDG implementation locally: The United Nations (UNDP and UN-Habitat) have set up a special platform for knowledge and information sharing (www.LocalizingTheSDGs.org), and the OECD has started developing an ambitious programme to support cities (and regions) to develop, implement and monitor the SDGs. In the EU context, the SDG Multi-Stakeholder-Platform set up by the European Commission in 2017 has recently, upon the initiative of the Committee of the Regions and other organisations, decided to set up a subgroup that will focus on SDG implementation at the local and regional level. Similar initiatives at the national, regional and local level abound.

One such initiative is the project “Global Nachhaltige Kommune in NRW (GNK NRW)” (Global Sustainable Municipalities) that has been implemented in the German region of North Rhine-Westphalia between 2016 and March 2018. In a two and a half-year process, 15 local authorities ranging from small and medium-sized to large towns and rural districts have systematically been supported in the elaborating of a sustainability strategy addressing their individual local challenges, but based on the global framework of the SDGs. This project, the first phase of which has now come to an end and that will be continued, is to date the single most comprehensive project in Europe aiming at a strategic localization of the SDGs. The approach has also been taken up in other German regions.

The purpose of the event is to present the approach and the results of the project and to discuss its relevance from a European perspective.

Program of the event:
